

It's lonely at the top. But you get a better view.

In these days of profit-pressures, cutbacks and spiraling energy costs, capturing the Business of the Year title is quite the feather in any company's "cap."

Staying ahead of the competition requires employers keep abreast of factors that can affect their firm's performance – including the array of laws governing the workplace, and the risks violations entail. Companies are confronted with claims for such things as overtime compensation, retaliation or discrimination.

Whether you seek to evaluate exposure to such claims, need employee training, your handbooks updated, FLSA compliance checked, or are already facing workplace litigation, our team of nine employment law litigators is available to help.

Congratulations to the Business of the Year. For those still trying to soar above their competition, maybe a workplace compliance check is in order.
